Chris Pointon says if he had known it would take "all summer" to get back into his apartment building, he would have found another place to live. LAUREN PARSONS/FOR METRO

What was thought to be a minor apartment fire has kept people away for six weeks

LAUREN PARSONS
 winnipeg@metronews.ca

Chris Pointon is spending his summer sleeping on friends' couches and spare beds.

He and his girlfriend have been shut out of their Edmonton Street apartment for six weeks, following an electrical fire on May 31.

"It's been a real bounce-around — we've been to three different places in six weeks, so it's like moving every two weeks," said Pointon.

The fire started in the middle of the day and residents were evacuated. That night they were given five minutes to retrieve necessities. Pointon said the first night they couldn't find their second cat and had to abandon it for four days before they were let in again, this time for 15 minutes.

The building owner now offers 24-hour security for residents to go in and out of their suites.

"As long as they have their ID, they just need to wear protective gear," said Curtis Shewchuk, who manages the property for Sussex Realty.

Shewchuk said people won't be allowed back in for good until the building obtains a re-occupancy permit from the city. Shewchuk said the contractors are expected to be done reconstruction by July 27.

"The day after the fire we were told the anticipated re-entry into the building would be July 15 or earlier," said Pointon. "If we had known it would be our whole summer, we would have looked for another place."

Shewchuk said: "Unfortunately, this is a great reason why people should have tenant insurance."

Pointon said he does have content insurance for his collectibles, but he does not have tenant insurance. Pointon and his girlfriend are looking for other options, but still have hope for the building.

"It's a good location. If they call me tonight or tomorrow and say we can move back in a week or two, then OK," he said.

Gate closure hurting steam-train business

Dwindling numbers. Assiniboine Park train has seen a 50-60 per cent drop in business since last year

LAUREN PARSONS
winnipeg@metronews.ca

At 1 p.m. on Friday, three people sat on the Assiniboine Park steam train waiting for a ride.

"This is the reality of it," said Tim Buzunis, owner and operator.

Buzunis said his business has lost 50 to 60 per cent of its attendance as a result of the Assiniboine Park Zoo's East Gate closure this spring, which he was unaware of until opening up his seasonal business this year.

According to Kevin Hunter, communications director for the Assiniboine Park Conservancy, the reasons for moving the main entrance to the South Gate are construction at the zoo and the promotional value of having the main entrance on a major street.

He said that people used to have to take the one-way road to the zoo's parking lot, and would see the train upon entering and exiting the zoo.

"When the zoo is busy, I'm busy — when it isn't, I'm not," Buzunis said. "That's how it's always been for 48 years. This gate closure is killing me. It breaks my heart to run the train with only two or three passengers."

Hunter said that the APC wants nothing more than to see the steam train thrive.

"The train is a staple to the park and overall our goal is to bring more people to the park and the zoo, and that includes businesses like Tim's," said Hunter.

Around 2 p.m. Friday afternoon, a new sign was being put up indicating the train's entrance and operating hours.

"That's right outside the station; people aren't going to see it there," he said. "Out of sight, out of mind, you know? I'd like signs for the train posted at every park entrance, so people remember the train is here."

Buzunis said if conditions don't change next year, he may relocate the train.

"I don't want to move the train. This is the only track it's ever run on since 1964," he said. "But I'm in bad shape."

City hall. St. James Fire Hall concerns addressed: Mayor

Mayor Sam Katz said city hall has listened to the concerns of residents and a business owner near a controversial fire hall under construction in St. James.

Last week, Katz and the rest of the members of the executive policy committee approved a slight change to plans for a new fire hall under construction and will be closing part of the west side of Century Street north of Portage Avenue.

The fire hall has drawn the ire of some residents and the owners of the Viscount Gort Hotel, located across the street, who feel the noise of the fire trucks will be too loud.

However, Katz believes the City of Winnipeg's administration "addressed many of those concerns that existed."

"As you can appreciate, it's a very unique, novel approach. OK, it's different, it's thinking out of the box," said Katz following the EPC meeting.

"They've made some changes to address some of the concerns, whether it be residents or businesses in the area."

The motion was approved by the EPC and now goes forward to council.

"Until recently with Sage Creek, we haven't invested in our fire paramedic station in probably 50 years," added Katz. "It's been a long time."

Raid leads to $1M drug bust

A raid in St. James on Thursday netted police a million dollars worth of pot.

Winnipeg police said they raided a home in the 500 block of Madison Street on Thursday just after 10 a.m. There they found about 1,000 pot plants, with a street worth of more than $1.1 million. They also found eight one-pound bags of pot worth about $20,000, and $65,000 worth of grow-op equipment.

Team looks at 28 missing-persons, homicide cases

RCMP and Winnipeg police officials say they're working "shoulder to shoulder" on a project aimed at solving the cases of 28 missing people and homicides dating back to 1961.

Called Project Devote, the team is made up of 18 police officers (10 from the Winnipeg Police Service and eight from the RCMP), two RCMP civilian member analysts, three RCMP data-entry personnel and one RCMP administrative support person.

"Project Devote will concentrate on the 28 investigations of unsolved homicides and missing persons where foul play is suspected, involving exploited or at-risk persons," said Const. Miles Hiebert during a press conference Friday morning.

No arrests have yet been made through the project.

The youngest victims are Cheryl Duck and Susan Holens, who were both 15.

There is one male victim on the list, 46-year-old William Weinbender.

"(Who makes Project Devote) is determined by at-risk or high risk to be exploited or suffer physical abuse," said Hiebert, referring to substance or alcohol abuse, transient lifestyles, frequent and regular hitchhiking, possible involvement in the sex trade, and potential mental-health issues.

Derek Nepinak, grand chief of the Assembly of Manitoba Chiefs, said the scope of Project Devote is limited and "does not directly address the epidemic of missing and murdered indigenous women."

Tower collapse kills 11

An apartment tower under construction collapsed on adjacent buildings in the Mediterranean city of Alexandria, killing 11 people, Egypt's Health Ministry said Sunday.

The ministry said five other people were injured and that search teams were searching for survivors buried under rubble.

The 11-storey building in the poor neighbourhood of al-Gomrouk collapsed late Saturday onto three adjacent buildings, reducing much of the structures to rubble. All the dead and injured lived in the three smaller buildings.

Building collapses are not uncommon in Egypt, where shoddy construction is widespread in shantytowns.

Syrian conflict a civil war: Red Cross

Formal declaration.

Announcement comes as UN observers investigate farm-village assault where dozens were reported killed

"International humanitarian law applies to all areas where the hostilities are taking place."

Hicham Hassan, International Committee of the Red Cross spokesperson

Syria's 16-month bloodbath crossed an important symbolic threshold Sunday as the international Red Cross formally declared the conflict a civil war, a status with implications for potential war-crimes prosecutions.

The Red Cross statement came as UN observers gathered new details on what happened in a village where dozens were reported killed in a regime assault. After a second visit to Tremseh on Sunday, the team said Syrian troops went door-to-door in the village, checking residents' IDs and then killing some of them and taking others away.

According to the UN, the attack appeared targeted at army defectors and activists.

"Pools of blood and brain matter were observed in a number of homes," a UN statement said.

On Sunday, Syria denied UN claims that government forces had used heavy weapons such as tanks, artillery and helicopters during the attack Thursday in Tremseh.

Syrian Foreign Ministry spokesman Jihad Makdissi said the violence was not a massacre — as activists and many foreign leaders have said — but a military operation targeting armed fighters who had taken control of the village.

The UN has implicated President Bashar Assad's forces in the assault. The head of the UN observer mission said Friday that monitors stationed near Tremseh saw the army using heavy weaponry and attack helicopters.

The fighting was some of the latest in the uprising against Assad, which activists say has killed more than 17,000 people. Violence continued Sunday, with more clashes reported around the capital, Damascus.

Vatican. Father of jailed butler defends son over leaked docs

The father of Pope Benedict XVI's imprisoned butler said in a letter published Sunday his son was honest and that he hopes the truth will emerge concerning the leaks of sensitive Vatican documents.

documents, which exposed corruption, infighting and power struggles in the Catholic Church's highest levels of governance.

While Andrea Gabriele defended his son, he hinted that the motivation behind the leaks was to expose wrongdoing for the sake of purifying the church. He said he hoped that Benedict's call to carry out "the necessary cleaning of the church" is realized.

In the letter, Andrea Gabriele insisted on his son's "great generosity and moral integrity." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Dozens dead, thousands cut off after floods, mudslides hit Japan

Thousands of people in southern Japan remained cut off Sunday by floods and mudslides triggered by torrential rains that have killed at least 26 people, local authorities said.

Evacuation orders issued a day earlier for a quarter of a million people were lifted in most areas Sunday as the rains subsided, allowing many people to return home.

But thousands remained cut off by landslides or fallen trees that blocked roads in mountainous areas.

More than 3,000 people were left stranded in Yame, in Fukuoka Prefecture in southwestern Japan, where roads were cut off to seven districts, the Kyodo news agency reported, citing local authorities. The Japanese military airlifted food by helicopters to stranded districts.

Local officials raised the death toll from the torrential rains in the northern parts of the Kyushu region to 26 and six people remain missing in Kumamoto, Oita and Fukuoka prefectures, Kyodo reported. Most of the victims were in their 70s and 80s.

In Yame, a 70-year-old man died after being caught in a landslide, while another man died in Yanagawa, also in Fukuoka, after being retrieved from a car at an irrigation channel floodgate, according to local authorities, Kyodo reported.

In Kyoto Prefecture, heavy rainfall of up to 90 millimeters per hour flooded around 100 houses each in Kameoka and Kyoto. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Arab Spring. Canada froze billions in assets: Document

Canadian authorities red-pencilled almost $4.3 billion in suspect assets belonging to dictators, allegedly corrupt officials and others in response to the Arab Spring uprisings, newly disclosed documents say.

An RCMP briefing note says the national police force's federal policing branch worked with the Foreign Affairs Department, Public Safety, security intelligence agencies and Canadian banks to "identify and freeze" the assets.

Privacy law and the confidentiality surrounding investigative efforts means only a portion of the $4.3 billion can be discussed and accounted for publicly.

Access to information

- The note, obtained by The Canadian Press under the Access to Information Act, paints a picture of the extent to which Canadian officials toiled behind the scenes to drain the financial lifeblood of Arab dictatorships.

Canada's e-domain turns 25

Oh, Canada. Online suffix has now grown to become the 14th largest registry out of 250 worldwide

How much can two letters accomplish in 25 years? Enough to become an entire country's online home and electronic national brand.

Few Canadians may have understood the significance of the .ca top-level domain when it first came into being in 1987, but a quarter-century later, few are left in any doubt.

The Canadian government, the bulk of the country's academic institutions and hundreds of sites that fuel national e-commerce are just a few of the two million domains that have chosen to append the .ca suffix to the end of their websites.

The man behind the .ca registry little envisioned such growth when he set out to carve out Canada's niche in cyberspace.

John Demco, then a computer science student at the University of British Columbia and now an industry consultant, said his decision to create the .ca suffix was driven largely by patriotism and a desire to make research easier.

As the Internet worked its way into more Canadian households, Demco watched his two-letter project grow to encompass some of the country's most prominent institutions.

Global finance. Canadian link to LIBOR scandal?

Canada's Competition Bureau is pushing ahead with its own probe of a mushrooming international scandal that has already ensnared a venerable British bank and forced the resignation of its chief executive.

Documents filed in an Ontario court suggest the bureau is investigating a possible Canadian link to the scandal that's rocking the world of global banking — financial skulduggery involving the manipulation of a key international interest rate known as the LIBOR rate.

One of the named parties — the Canadian branch of the Royal Bank of Scotland — has filed a court challenge on the grounds the bureau's actions are unconstitutional and well beyond the scope of its mandate. But the investigation hasn't stopped, said Gabrielle Tasse, a spokesperson for the bureau.

Tech troubles. RIM loses $147.2M patent lawsuit

Just as the dust began to settle from a tumultuous annual meeting, Research In Motion was hit with another setback Friday as a northern California jury ordered the troubled BlackBerry maker to pay $147.2 million in a patent lawsuit.

The Waterloo, Ont.-based company was fresh out of Tuesday's meeting — which saw board members take some heat even as they hung on to their seats — when the verdict came down in the suit over a remote management system for wireless devices.

The decision comes at the worst time for RIM, which reported a first-quarter loss and delayed the release of its much-hyped BlackBerry 10 operating system until next year, an analyst said.

While the technology giant is no stranger to patent lawsuits, which are considered par for the course in the sector, this particular case didn't garner much attention until the verdict, Carmi Levy said Saturday.

"There's never a good time to lose a $147-million judgment in court but there certainly is a worst time and this clearly is it for RIM," he said in an interview.

RIM said it is "disappointed" the jury sided with the Delaware-based Mformation Technologies and is "evaluating all legal options."

"RIM has worked hard for many years to independently develop its leading-edge BlackBerry technology and industry-leading intellectual property portfolio, and RIM does not believe that the Mformation patent in question is valid," the company said in a statement Saturday.

Ottawa. Rules keep MPs blind to spending: Report

A new report says arcane rules are keeping MPs in the dark about the billions in government spending they should be scrutinizing.

Members of Parliament receive conflicting, outdated information about how billions of tax dollars are being spent each year, and get little opportunity to review fiscal plans.

Just this spring, not a single House of Commons committee was able to report on its examination of some proposed spending because the information arrived too late — and the session clock ran out.

Those are some of the findings in a Commons report released without fanfare this month, even as opposition MPs railed against the Harper government for ramming through its omnibus budget bill without proper study.

The new report, from the all-party government operations committee, argues the federal budget arrives too late each year — and says the government should instead table it by Feb. 1 annually.

The report by the committee, chaired by New Democrat MP Pat Martin, is a non-partisan acknowledgment that parliamentarians are increasingly hogtied in their ability to review and approve government spending.

CONVENTION CENTRE EXPANSION IS MISSING DETAILS, AND DEBATE

URBAN COMPASS
Colin Fast
winnipeg@metronews.ca

A few weeks ago, a group of civic and provincial officials stood in front of a parking lot on York Avenue and proudly proclaimed the Winnipeg Convention Centre would be expanded ... at some time, with some design at some cost. I'd love to tell you more, but the details don't exist.

There's no schedule, no design and no solid financing strategy. We know government will contribute $149 million, but the WCC's own CEO said his organization would chip in " $17 million, $18 million, $19 million, $20 million. It depends what our business plan in the future can support."

A $180-million project and there's still no business plan?

Unfortunately, there's also been no meaningful debate to this point about whether we even need a bigger convention centre, and if this is the best use of $149 million in public money.

Conventional wisdom

"Across North America, convention centres are struggling to hit the rosy economic development targets that were promised when they were first built or expanded."

To many people, and especially politicians, expanding the WCC seems like a no-brainer. We grow the centre, we attract more people to conventions, they spend more money while they're here, and everyone wins, right?

Not so fast. Across North America, convention centres are struggling to hit the rosy economic development targets that were promised when they were first built or expanded.

If cities like Vancouver, Chicago, Boston, Minneapolis and Austin can't draw enough people to make their centres viable, what makes Winnipeg think it's going to be different?

Part of the problem is that there's a glut of new convention space on the market. Within Canada, new or expanded centres have recently opened in Vancouver, Victoria, Ottawa and Niagara Falls, and a project in Halifax will start construction next year.

The WCC even faces local competition. If the Red River Exhibition goes ahead with plans to build an arena and event centre on the West Perimeter, that could draw away the consumer shows — the boat show, RV show, wedding show, home show, etc. — that make up much of the WCC's current business.

On top of all this, the number of people travelling to attend conventions has been steadily declining over the past several years. So we've got more cities, with more meeting space, fighting over a shrinking market.

As a result, cities have taken to offering bribes — "economic-development incentive grants," they call them — to lure major events into their empty convention centres. Winnipeg does this through its "Special Event Tourism Fund."

We're already paying hundreds of millions for new convention space, then millions more to event organizers, and how is this supposed to be an economic no-brainer again?

The reality is that if we want a city people will visit, then we need to build a city worth visiting. That means investing in things like parks and recreation facilities, public transit, basic infrastructure renewal, and the development of more dynamic neighbourhoods.

Not only would those investments draw more visitors and help create a more positive image for our city, they'd also do a lot more for current residents than a big empty box in the middle of downtown.

With Batman lurking, the prehistoric critters of Ice Age: Continental Drift ran off with the box office, with the movie earning $46 million in its opening weekend. The 20th Century Fox animated film is the fourth in the decade-long Ice Age series and the first in 3-D. The studio's box office estimate Sunday for the North America performance of Continental Drift was on par with previous Ice Age movies but well below the opening weekend of the second installment, The Meltdown, which opened with $68 million. In its second week of release, The Amazing Spider-Man, Sony's reboot of the web-slinging superhero, earned $35 million, pushing it just past a total of $200 million domestically. In spite of the barrage of Hollywood blockbusters that followed his tenure in the suit, the irreverent hero who saves the day by bam, zap, and ka-pow-ing scores of henchmen remains the definitive Batman in much of the world. The '60s TV series and its companion movie were the height of camp. West delivered his kooky lines with deadpan sincerity, wearing the scripts' overt corniness all over his polyester batsleeves and his underwear on the wrong side of his pants. But after West drank a cool glass of milk he could get to the bottom of any pun-ridden plot.

When Keaton first got the nod to play Batman in the 1989 Tim Burton directed reboot, fan-boys griped that the star of Mr. Mom and Beetlejuice was an out-of-left-field choice. But Keaton would win over even the most persnickety of the bunch and reprised the role in 1992's Batman Returns. Despite a restrictive rubber bat suit that often made his movements appear stiff and wooden, Keaton clicked on all cylinders as the stoic vigilante plagued by the anguish of his parents' murder.

Après Batman Utility: Keaton's arched eyebrows turned up in a bunch in '90s movies but his output mellowed into the millennium as he started taking on daddy roles in forgettable fare like First Daughter and Post-Grad.

Val Kilmer

Kilmer had his hands full in 1995's Batman Forever. He was tasked with grooming an acrobatic sidekick and wooing a sexy psychologist all while squaring off against a pair of fiendishly insidious maniacs from his rogues gallery in Riddler and Two-Face. Kilmer was an assured and appealing Batman and gets top marks for looking a lot more like the comic book depiction of Bruce Wayne as a gallivanting playboy than his predecessors. Meanwhile, Kilmer's reportedly batty behaviour between takes had him at loggerheads with director Joel Schumacher. "Val is the most psychologically troubled human being I've ever worked with," he told Premiere magazine.

Après Batman Utility: While his 1990s heyday was well in the rearview, the now chubbier Julliard-schooled thespian continues to work steadily.

Batarangs: 7 out of 10

George Clooney

Clooney had the misfortune of starring in the nadir of Batman flicks and having the most anatomical suit complete with nipples. A critical and commercial flop, Batman & Robin meanders for 125 merciless minutes of canned dialogue, hokey one-liners, and senseless subplot overload. Clooney didn't do the movie any favours. He failed to capture the spirit of the character and comes across as way too dull and well adjusted to be believable as a modern version of the World's Greatest Detective. Compared with the previous two Batman incarnations, he is Papa Smurf in a cape with some kung-fu moves.

Après Batman Utility: Clooney was still doing ER when he shot Batman's biggest clunker. Despite his tarnishing of the bat-cowl, his Hollywood heavyweight years were still ahead of him.

Batarangs: 3 out of 10

Christian Bale

The first time Bale pulled on the Batman costume he freaked out. "The claustrophobia was just unbelievable," said Bale at a recent press conference for The Dark Knight Rises. "I stood there and I thought, 'I can't breathe. I can't think. This is too tight, this is squeezing my head. I'm about to have a nervous breakdown.'" Once he got his bearings Bale plumbed the darkest and most tortured corners of the D.C. character's psyche for inspiration. Unfortunately his thorough probe also produced his ridiculous snarl. Bale makes Batman sound like a guy in the witness protection program being interviewed on Dateline. He should try a duet with Tom Waits with that gravely tone.

Après Batman Utility: While Christopher Nolan's Batman trilogy has kept Bale busy, he's also managed to work his magic in The Prestige and take home a best supporting actor Oscar for his turn in The Fighter.

A very Gaga sleepover

Lady Gaga reportedly hosted a sleepover at the Chateau Marmont with fellow 26-year-olds Lindsay Lohan and singer Lana del Ray, spending the evening "watching old movies and playing board games," sources tell X17.

"The three of them had dinner in the garden on Tuesday night at Chateau, and then Lindsay and Gaga ran upstairs to play dress-up and came down in different outfits," a source says. But judging by Gaga's Twitter feed, Lohan wasn't eating much.

"When you ordered a cucumber and a knife to the bar last night, I thought you were going to perform a vasectomy. Just a skinny b—," the singer tweeted to Lohan the next morning.

Charlie Sheen

After using the social media site to keep his career going after getting fired from Two and a Half Men, Charlie Sheen has quit Twitter.

The account boasted 7.7 million followers and had also been a useful tool for promoting his new sitcom, Anger Management, but apparently Sheen has other plans.

"Thank you all for your amazing support," Charlie tells TMZ. "Trust me when I say please 'follow' me to my next endeavor. It's gonna be epic."

Proving to be a man of his word, his Twitter account has been deleted, with just an error message reading, "Sorry, that page doesn't exist" remaining.

Zombie apocalypse even more doomed

MONICA WEYMOUTH
scene@metronews.ca

Even for a zombie film, things are getting messy on the set of World War Z. After rewrites, the price tag is inching towards $170 million, and the studio still isn't happy with the ending, according to Vulture.

It's so tense that Brad Pitt — who stars as a UN employee tasked with interviewing survivors after a worldwide zombie attack — is rumoured to no longer be on speaking terms with director Marc Forster, who may be replaced for upcoming reshoots.

"They have to be careful, because the (Directors Guild of America) has strict rules that say Forster has to be there on the set," a source a source tells the site. "But someone is likely to be brought in to help direct the new action scenes."

The highly anticipated horror film, of course, has a history of trouble. Producers passed on shooting in Philadelphia — where the story is set, for obvious reasons, but the zombies are unionized — and instead set up shop in Glasgow, which has a pesky sense of hope in the air.

What really goes on in the Olympic Village

The world's best athletes engage in a very adult form of exercise in the Olympic Village, if U.S. gold medalist Hope Solo is to be believed.

"There's a lot of sex going on," she tells ESPN. "With a once-in-a-lifetime experience, you want to build memories, whether it's sexual, partying or on the field. I've seen people having sex right out in the open. On the grass, between buildings, people are getting down and dirty."

And according to the incredibly forthcoming soccer player, shenanigans at the Beijing Olympics in 2008 weren't just between athletes and other athletes.

"I may have snuck a celebrity back to my room without anybody knowing, and snuck him back out," Solo teases. "But that's my Olympic secret."

And late nights are apparently the norm — or at least they were during in Beijing.

"When we were done partying, we got out of our nice dresses, got back into our stadium coats and, at 7 a.m. with no sleep, went on the Today show drunk," Solo says. "Needless to say, we looked like hell."

Stallone's son found dead

Sylvester Stallone's 36-year-old son, Sage Moonblood Stallone, was found dead in his Los Angeles apartment Friday, with a suspected overdose of prescription medication the cause, according to People magazine.

There were no signs of foul play or forced entry, police officials say, and Sage's body had reportedly been in the apartment undisturbed for three days.

"Sylvester Stallone is devastated and grief-stricken over the sudden loss of his son Sage Stallone," a rep for the actor said in a statement. "His compassion and thoughts are with Sage's mother, Sasha. Sage was a very talented and wonderful young man, his loss will be felt forever."

Teen Vogue snubs protestors

Two girl crusaders who staged a mock red carpet show against Teen Vogue said their meeting with the magazine's top editor was brief and chilly.

The two met with editor-in-chief Amy Astley for less than five minutes last week, when they delivered a petition bearing more than 28,000 signatures after their Times Square protest near the offices of the magazine. Astley did not talk to Emma Stydahr, 17, or Carina Cruz, 16, about their request for Teen Vogue to declare in its pages that it doesn't digitally manipulate images. Instead, the girls were given copies of Teen Vogue and told to use them to learn more about the magazine.

"It was kind of shocking how rude they were to us," Carina said in a statement released by their all-girl activist group, SPARK Movement.

The magazine released its own statement. "We are always open to readers' feedback and were receptive to meeting with Emma and Carina to give them an opportunity to discuss their concerns," it said a day after saying it makes a "conscious and continuous effort to promote a positive body image among our readers."

They had an abortion pact

Genetics. If you knew your child would have a genetic disorder, would you abort?

KOA
mommyish.com

When Rachel and her husband learned that they were pregnant, they began to weigh the possibility of having a child with a severe genetic disorder.

Conceiving at the "advanced maternal age" of 35 years old, Rachel was aware that both she and her husband, aged 40, were at a higher risk for having a child with down syndrome, among other conditions.

They decided that should their fetus test positive for a severe genetic disorder, they would choose abortion.

In retrospect, the now mother to a healthy baby boy says that she and her husband mainly considered quality of a life and what the baby would ultimately prefer.

"We had to ask ourselves what we would want if we were the fetus. Life is challenging enough when you have all of your physical and emotional capacities in check," she says.

A controversial form of testing

Emotionally, both pro-choice parents worried they could not be a sturdy support system to a struggling child. The fear of failing a suffering kid caused both Rachel and her husband multiple panic attacks as they readied their life for a new addition.

Financial components also had husband and wife realizing that they couldn't afford treatment for severe disabilities. At the time they found themselves pregnant, Rachel had started a new business and her husband was a teacher.

Rachel's pact with her husband mirrors concerns some

With whole genome genetic testing, some women say they would abort a baby with a disability. THINKSTOCK doctors have about the availability of noninvasive genetic testing. Between daddy's saliva and mommy's blood, scientists can now access a baby's entire genome with a peek into mutations that cause autism.

Other developing blood tests can determine a baby's likelihood to be born with down syndrome following just a few weeks after conception. And understandably, doctors are concerned for what ethical territory some parents are willing to foray into.

Dr. Arthur Caplan told ABC News that parents obtaining accurate genetic information about their unborn "will be among the most controversial forms of testing ever to appear in medicine as the debate over abortion and disabilities shift to whole genome genetic testing."

Marcy Darnovsky, associate executive director of the Center for Genetics and Society, told The New York Times the accessibility of tests will cause "who deserves to be born" dialogues between parents and doctors.

"It is a very personal choice"

Nevertheless, Rachel is contemplating expanding her family once again with the same approach in mind. This time both she and her husband will be even older. "If we did, or do in the future, have another child and they are born with a disability, we would raise them to the best of our ability and give them all the love we have to give. However, given the choice, we would allow a healthier spirit to come into the world at another time.

"It is a very personal choice and never an easy one," she adds. "There is nothing easy for women, pro-choice or not, about terminating a pregnancy. There will inevitably be an emotional hurdle to go over."

I'm a mom and a smoker, OK?

mommyish.com

Like a lot of mothers, actress Hilary Duff — who was recently caught holding a cigarette — probably smokes. Duff was trending on Twitter last week because the new mom was holding a butt. People, it seems, are mad at her because not only was she caught with a butt but she's a new mother, which somehow makes it worse.

Duff apologized and insisted she was holding the cigarette for a friend. "It looks worse than it is," she said. Honey, it's OK. Just say you're trying to quit.

I know this feeling because I, too, am a part-time smoker. I am not proud of this. Starting to smoke was the worst thing I have ever done, especially since I started smoking in my 20s, which is way past the time anyone with half a brain should start to smoke.

I have a group of friends — all mommies — who know I smoke, because they smoke, too. Sometimes, I feel like my house is a day care for smoking mommies. But, like Hilary Duff, no mother I know wants anyone to know she smokes.

The problem with mommy smokers is that while it only takes a few minutes to have a cigarette, it takes twice as long for the after cigarette process.

This includes watching friends wash their hands and faces manically, Purell their hands, spray themselves with body spray, suck back mints or pop in a piece of gum and take off their "smoking" sweater, which they put on to cover their clothes before they light up. They also always tie their hair back.

The point is all mothers already know that smoking is disgusting.

Not that I'm judging Duff. I think she needs to hide her habit a bit better. I'm suggesting she does what the rest of my mommy smoker friends do, which is stop by my place and use my backyard or go into an alleyway.

Because after all, Hilary Duff, you're a new mother.

I'll huff and I'll puff. THINKSTOCK

Work wardrobes that work

Dress for success.

How to keep your attire professional while maintaining your personal style

BRUCE WALSH

Metro World News in Philadelphia

Soojin K. Chu is the founder of Swagger & Glide, a Boston-based personal shopper/fashion consultant company.

Chu specializes in customizing wardrobes to specific professional environments while incorporating personal taste.

What's the first thing you address when working on a client's professional wardrobe?

Most people don't realize that the way your clothes fit is a huge part of how you're perceived by others.

If the shoulders of your suit are ridiculously big, you're giving the impression that you don't belong in it — like you borrowed your dad's suit. So I work a lot with my clients on making sure the clothes you have on really do fit you and your body type.

Want to boost your confidence around the office? Suit yourself. ISTOCK

How do you balance feeling like yourself and fitting into a business environment?

Sometimes people want to hold on to how they dress as their own creative outlet. And I encourage that in small doses: a fun tie, suspenders instead of a belt or an unusual pair of socks. But, especially with first impressions, nobody ever says, "This person looks too professional for this setting."

Is there a purpose to dressing for work, beyond just getting the job and looking professional?

Oh yes. For starters, if you make yourself stand out in a work environment that creates a subconscious reaction in others: You feel less approachable to them. At the same time, you don't want to feel like you've lost your personality. You want to let yourself think outside of the box. It's a constant balance.

Throw something no one's really expecting and hope for the best.

Villanueva, giving the Blue Jays the outing that they needed, fanned Cleveland's Casey Kotchman with two out and two on to end the sixth inning at the Rogers Centre on Sunday, the key out to quell the final uprising as Toronto blanked the Indians 3-0 before an announced crowd of 26,407.

And the big out came in part by blind luck.

"Sometimes there's nothing better than a good old backup slider. I think it surprised everybody, me, him, J.P. (Arencibia behind the plate), everybody," Villanueva said after he set a career high with eight strikeouts to run his record to 4-0.

"That's why he swung through it, it was such a bad pitch.... Didn't know where it was going to go and he swung through it. I don't really care how it happens, it got the last out."

Villanueva gave the Blue Jays six innings before Jason Frasor worked the seventh.

The 28-year-old Villanueva gave up only three hits, never more than one in an inning, and pitched himself out of a couple of ticklish situations.

The Jays gave Villanueva a bit of a cushion with a three-run third inning, helped by a bout of wildness from Indians starter Derek Lowe.

Every Olympics provides us with a belle of the ball.

All of these athletes are so young, so unaffected, so uncommonly nice. We like a bit of growl from a pro, but the Olympics is a social experiment proving to us that you don't have to be fitful and snarling to be great at something.

There are a wide variety of Canadian candidates for that role in London, but few have the elfin charm of Laval, Que., native Jennifer Abel.

When she walks into a room, Abel does so on her toes, like a dancer. She has that open, slightly sideways smile designed for maximum, childlike endearment. She is shy, especially when speaking English.

"I have been taking an English course," Abel says. The accent is hard, all Quebec. She pauses. "Class? Course? Do you say 'class' or 'course'?"

Either, which proves that it's working.

Canada is not a factory producing child divers. Abel was one of the youngest ever when she earned a senior spot at age 15, and an Olympic berth at 16. She placed a very respectable 13th on the three-metre board in Beijing.

While Canada's diving team is still associated with two long-serving veterans — Emilie Heymans (Abel's three-metre synchro partner) and Alex Despatie — it is Abel who comes in on the best run of form.

She did not miss a podium during the 2011 season on the three-metre board. She won a bronze at the world aquatics championships in that event and a silver with Heymans in synchro. Along with freestyle distance swimmer Ryan Cochrane, Abel was named Canada's 2011 aquatic athlete of the year.

This sort of achievement obviously requires focus, but Abel comes across as a dreamy sort.

"The time I'm in the air seems so long. Sometimes it feels like I have to think about everything.... It feels like my life passes in front of me before I hit the water."

Jennifer Abel

When she was about 12, she skimmed the board with her head on a rotation during practice. It fixed in her a fear of hurting herself during a dive (ask Despatie about how real that feeling is). She decided she was done with diving. Her family and coaches coaxed her back to the pool. And she adapted to that fear in an odd way. While most divers spend the moments before their dive running through its many complications, Abel does the opposite.

"Nothing. I'm thinking nothing before. If I try to visualize, I will visualize that I am hurting myself," Abel says.

She brought that looseness to Beijing. There are a

Back on the board

Canadian diver Alexandre Despatie has cleared a psychological hurdle in his comeback from a head injury.

- On Friday, he completed the dive that landed him in hospital with a concussion last month and put his London Games preparation in jeopardy.

- "Today has been a memorable one!" Despatie said on Twitter. "This morning I did 'THE' dive again...It went well! I was a bit emotional after...But a big step for me! #proud."

thousand good reasons why someone doesn't do as well as they might have dreamed they could. Like the rest of us, Olympians are not realists. They know their place well before they arrive, but cling to the idea that the unrealized breakthrough could happen at the perfect moment.

Sometimes, the hope confuses the reality. Many speak of their first Olympics as a teachable moment that has nothing to do with sports, and everything to do with adaptation to the stage itself.

Abel won't allow herself to think that way.

"In Beijing, I wasn't nervous at all. I didn't pay attention to anything, to how big it is," she says. "But now I know. Last time I came 13th. All I want to do is beat that place."

Suspension overturned

IOC changes tune on Kuwaiti flag

The IOC lifted a ban on Kuwait's Olympic Committee, allowing the athletes from the Gulf emirate to compete under their country's flag at the London Games.

The International Olympic Committee suspended Kuwait in 2010 because of political interference. The IOC said in May that Kuwaiti athletes would be allowed to participate at the Games despite the dispute, but would have to compete and march in the opening ceremony under the Olympic flag. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Racism allegations

Aussie Steffensen threatens to sit out after 400m snub

Australian track athlete John Steffensen has threatened to boycott the London Olympics after alleging racism because he was not selected individually to run the 400 metres and was given only a relay spot.

Steffensen, in a television interview, accused Athletics Australia of racial vilification and said he would bypass the Games in protest. The dual Commonwealth Games gold medallist was upset after an individual 400 berth was granted to teenager Steve Solomon, a runner who also achieved a B-qualifying time.

Steffensen was selected only as a member of Australia's 4x400 relay team.

With the opening ceremony less than two weeks away, there's a mad dash to the finish line at the Olympics and it has nothing to do with sprinters.

Hundreds of construction workers are toiling away inside the Olympic Park, laying cables, installing seats and adding the last layers of sparkle and polish to the venues.

There's plenty to do. "It's looking a bit industrial isn't it?" said Chris Allen, a local who came to the edge of the park to have a look. "I am not seeing England's green fields. I do hope it's going to look better."

Shades of Athens, where chronic delays pushed workers to the brink to complete preparations in time for the Games to start in 2004? Hardly, say London organizers, who have prided themselves on finishing their massive construction project ahead of time and on budget. Things may look a bit messy now, they say, but all will be fine by the time the curtain goes up on July 27, when the torch is lit.

"We're not at the stage yet where we're ready to flick the TV on," James Bulley, director of venues for the organizing committee LOCOG, told The Associated Press. "The athletes aren't ready to start competing yet, either. We want all our venues to look absolutely spectacular and pristine.

"The venues are ready. We're now just doing the final setup for the Games. We're in a good place. We're on track. There's nothing I'm worried about."

The last few weeks and days are all about putting up signs, fitting in the remaining seats and completing the landscaping. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
